ENTERTAIN MEMBERS OF ADVISORY BOARD

Among those upon whom fortune has cast its smile, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Ramacciotti are numbered. For a quarter of a century they labored early and late doing the best they knew meekly and patiently, a large part of that time, in their store on San Bruno avenue, near School street.

Oftentimes it was slow plodding, with the future far from satisfactory, but at last, through fortunate investments, the prospects brightened and their long contemplated dream of visiting, once more, the land of their childhood could be realized without spending more than they could afford. Last May they started on their happy, as they called it, deferred honeymoon.

From May until just before the last election, they enjoyed the greatest pleasure traveling from place to place in Italy, lingering longest where their childhood and youth were passed. Great changes were evident to them wherever they went, still the well remembered scenes brought back to them all the hopes of earliest ambitions and filled them with joy.

Here one of the honors that has come to Mr. Ramacciotti is to be a member of the advisory board of the Bank of Italy, Colma, which he enjoys greatly, taking part in each monthly meeting. He is always both careful of the welfare of the bank and considerate of its customers. He is particularly fond of his associate members of the advisory board and felt he must do something to show his appreciation.

So, after the last meeting, February 4, he invited them to his home, where they were received graciously by Mrs. A. G. Ramacciotti and Mr. and Mrs. A. Grandona, the daughter and son-in-law.

Very soon they were all seated around the banquet table, and, until long after midnight, they were regaled with the choicest of Italian and American dainties, while speeches were made, stories were told, songs were sung, and every minute afforded unrestrained delight.

The following were those who were glad to pay tribute to deserving people: George Lagomarsino, Louis Nava, Angelo Stampanoni, Charles Suenderman, Frank Cresta, Frank Armenio, Angelo Olcese, W. H. Clay, Claude Cattori and W. J. Savage.

H. H. SMITH ORGANIZATION HOLDS ANNUAL MEETING

The annual get-together meeting of the H. H. Smith organization was held last Saturday evening at the home of Mayor H. H. Smith. This is an annual dinner and business meeting at which the policies and matters of interest regarding the welfare and progress the organization are discussed, and plans made for the coming year.

The meeting of last Saturday night marked the twenty-first year of this business enterprise, which began on a very small scale, and has grown to its present splendid proportions.

In addition to the benefits derived from this meeting, dancing, music and games, in addition to an excellent dinner, contributed to a very enjoyable evening.

The members of the organization present were John A. Matzek, Lyal Ingersoll, G. A. Matzek, Mrs. M. I. Trier, Theodore Hopman, A. R. Matzek, Gus Ford and H. H. Smith. There were also present Mrs. Gus Ford, Mrs. Theodore Hopman, Miss Kathleen M. Regan and E. R. Trier.

A surprise was sprung by the announcement of the engagement of Kathleen M. Regan, daughter of William and Kate Regan, and John A. Matzek, manager of the H. H. Smith Lumber Yard. Miss Regan is one of Daly City's most charming and popular young ladies. Mr. Matzek has been with the H. H. Smith organization for many years and is widely know and well liked.

MOST ENJOYABLE VALENTINE PARTY

Last Saturday evening, February 9, a number of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Fellows met at their Niantic street home and spent a very enjoyable evening. The most intresting part of the program was a delicious dinner of choice French delicacies. The tabel so charmingly set, every one of the numerous courses served, and all the preparations were the work and pleasure of Mrs. Fellows, who was praised by all for the success she had achieved.

During the enjoyment of the dinner a number of witty speeches were made and not a speaker failed to pay tribute to the host and hostess for their generosity.

After the dinner dancing followed and was kept up until past midnight. When the hour of the guests' going home arrived, many earnest good wishes for the health and success of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Fellows were expressed.

PUBLIC SCHOOL WEEK OBSERVANCE IN APRIL

The tenth annual observance of public schools week in California will be held this year during the week beginning on April 22, according to an announcement by Gus A. Hutaff, Grand Master of Masons of California. Although originally instituted as a Masonic function and celebrated only in lodge rooms, the development of interest in the activities of the week has become so marked that it has assumed the proportions of a state wide community event.

Last year there were over 500 meetings throughout the state in school auditoriums, and other places, city, county and state officials, and civic, commercial and fraternal organizations being interested in the activities of the week.

In his proclamation, Hutaff says: "Every child should share in the fullness and richness of the opportunity for success which is made possible through education.

"It becomes our duty, therefore, as citizens to do all in our power to support such a worthy cause as public schools week. It should be remembered that public schools week is a community affair in which we seek the active co-operation of all local civic organizations and the participation of all the people in the community."

CHURCH BOARD DISCUSSES PLANS FOR THE FUTURE

The official board meeting of Grace Presbyterian church was held Thursday evening of last week, with trustees, elders and pastor present, in conference with the executive secretary of San Francisco Presbytery, Rev. Clyde Smith, D. D.

The Every Member canvass was considered, and the officers decided to put on a more intensive and extensive campaign for funds than was carried out last year. A larger budget was adopted, more adequately meeting the needs of the church work in this community; and an executive committee was appointed to plan and to start the campaign. The church is one of the most essential institutions in any community. "Milleniums of history have produced the church, which offers to satisfy man's most ancient need." Grace church is planniing a larger program to meet the needs of its neighborhood.

As the campaign mentioned progresses, opportunity will be given many friends to have a share in the financial support of the church work.

Principal Diether expressed his willingness to do so if the students could finance the operation of the team. The student executive board decided to meet the financial situation by means of a paper drive.

SUSPECT CONFESSES BURNING OF HOUSE

Following an extended investigation by Sheriff James J. McGrath and the state arson board into Redwood City's mysterious fires of January and February, it is believed they have cleared up at least one, with the arrest last Tuesday of Ernest Sepulveda, aged 24, former convicted burglar, on a charge of arson and attempt to defraud the insurance company. The fire mystery cleard up is the burning of a three-room house in the Fair Oaks district of Redwood City on the morning of January 31.

It is said that Sepulveda has confessed that he consipred with his sweetheart to burn the house, jointly owned by the girl and her mother, in order to collect the insurance. He needed the money, he said, to make payments on an automobile. The girl is Mrs. Loretta Quinos, aged 23, and her mother, Mrs. Juanita Felix, is owner of the La Paloma Cafe on El Camino Real.

Sepulveda is reported to have said that on the evening before he burned down the house he had gone to Monterey, to "establish an alibi." He returned the same evening, distributed newspapers, lit them, and remained to see that the woodwork caught, and then returned to Monterey.

NEW BRIDGE WILL SPEED UP TRAFFIC

A traffic survey of highway routing over the new San Francisco Bay toll bridge, which is to be opened to traffic March 2, shows that the new span will provide the quickest travel time between San Francisco and points in the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys.

Traffic over the Lincoln highway which leads to the bay district through the Dublin canyon highway and over the main arteries of the state highway system, it is revealed in the survey, will avoid much congestion by use of the new bridge route. WESTERN PACIFIC SEEKS GREAT NORTHERN TIE-UP

Acting concurrently and in co-operation, the Great Northern Railroad Company and the Western Pacific Railroad Company on February 14 filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington, D. C., applications for certificates of public convenience and necessity, to enable them to provide a railroad by the construction of new lines, or partly by use of other lines, between Klamath Falls, the southernmost terminus of the Great Northern in Oregon, and the main line of the Western Pacific at Paxton or Keddie, Plumas county, California.

According to the application filed by the Great Northern Railway, that company proposes to costruct and operate an extension of its existing line from Klamath Falls southerly to a point at or near Lookout, Modoc county, California. In an application, filed simultaneously by the Western Pacific, it is proposed by the Western Pacific to provide a line of railroad extending from Paxton or Keddie on its main line northerly via Westwood to meet and connect with the Great Northern's southerly extension.

The distance to be covered in closing the gap between the existing lines of the Great Northern and the Western Pacific is approximately 200 miles and the two companies are prepared to begin construction as soon as the necessary authorization is obtained from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The closing of this gap will connect the vast system of the Great Northern Railway with the lines of the Western Pacific, thereby creating and establishing a new competitive route between points on the Western Pacific and its connections and points on the Great Northern and its connections. When this link between the two railroad systems is completed and in operation there will follow a proper adjustment of rates and through routes will be established to and from the East and also to and from points in the West insofar as may be practicable and necessary to serve the shipping and traveling public.

Participation by the Western Pacific in this new and vital railroad project is in furtherance of its aims and objects which are, in accordance with its declared policy, to provide new and improved railroad transportation facilities where they are lacking or inadequate, to upbuild the regions which it serves, to stimulate the growth of new territory, to provide a net-work of feeder lines in California, and to increase its traffic to and from the state of California. The new project goes even further in that it will provide a new outlet for important sections of the West and a new competing route with advantages of far reaching importance not only to states on the Pacific Coast, but to the entire West.

How the completion of the connecting link between the Western Pacific and the Great Northern will afford new outlets for various sections of the West and will make it possible to establish new and competitive routes between important cities, is to be seen from the following summary of the main operations of the two railroads:

The Western Pacific operates a through route to the East from San Francisco and Oakland, via Stockton and Sacramento, and thence via Marysville, Oroville and the Feather river canyon through Nevada to Salt Lake City, Utah, where it connects with the Denver & Rio Grande Western and the Union Pacific for Eastern points, also with local Utah lines. Western Pacific subsidiary railroads in California are the Western Pacific California Railroad Company which proposes to costruct a railroad from San Francisco to Niles via Redwood City, and from Nilegarden to Fresno and beyond; the Sacramento Northern Railway, which operates an electric line between Oakland, Sacramento and Chico, with branches serving important towns; and the Tidewater Southern Railway, an electric line from Stockton southward to Manteca, Modesto, Turlock and Hilmar. The Western Pacific also owns a one-third interest in the Central California Traction Company, an electric line between Sacramento and Stockton.

The Great Northern Railway Company operates a vast system of main line railroads and branches in the nine states of Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon, and the two Canadian provinces of British Columbia and Manitoba. Its eastern terminues is St. Paul, Minnesota. From St. Paul the Great Northern operates a through route west through Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana and Idaho, to Spokane, Tacoma and Seattle, Washington. Through the Spokane, Portland and Seattle Railway, the Great Northern controls a through route to Portland, Oregon, and also to Klamath Falls, Oregon, via Bend.

Physical connection of the two systems through the 200-mile line of railroad, between Klamath Falls and the main line of the Western Pacific at Paxton or Keddie will, therefore, establish a new and practical route between vast territory in California, Nevada, Utah, Arizon and New Mexico on the south, and the great domain embraced in the states of Oregon and Washington, the provinces of British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and the other states which the Great Northern and its line traverse.

The connecting link will provide rail transportation for the vast timbered area lying between the present line of the Western Pacific and Klamath Falls and will develop new territory not now provided with transportation facilities.

YOUR BANK AND HOW TO USE IT

THE TRUST DEPARTMENT

The Trust Department has been properly called the "heart of the bank." Perhaps no other unit in the modern banking institution comes closer to the hearthstones, the hopes and aspirations, in fact the whole inner life of banking customers and their kin. It is no exaggeration to say that modern trust service is one of the greatest sustaining forces of present-day society.

And that"heart of the bank" is as easy to reach as the nearest teller's window. Indeed it is not even necessary to be a depositor in order to obtain the services of the Trust Department. Its advantages and safeguards are designed as much for the protection of generations yet unborn as for the protection of those that are living today. The old notion that it is a service for the "privileged few" is no longer prevalent. There is no department in the bank that has a more universal appeal; no other department that can more definately discount both present and future hazards that might threaten the peace and comfort of the family fireside of the cherished business of the master of the house.

In the old days those who were left behind to assure the burdens of estate management and finances all too often found themselves hopelessly entangled. On the other hand it might have been a distraught widow or son or daughter seeking to salvage a legacy from well-nigh insurmountable debt, and on the other hand an inexperienced business partner or associate trying with might and main to master the unfamiliar detail of the business enterprise left behind by the departed, so as to save such enterprise from sinking into bankruptcy. Often too, there were certain terms interwoven into the verbiage of the Last Will and Testament which became painful inequities and injustices when the instrument was actually probated and administered. Not infrequently there was somewhere in the picture the shadow of a mental or physical incompetent to add new cares to the burdens of the bereaved.

Modern trust service has changed this gloomy picture considerably. The business of managing estates and caring for the financial welfare of inexperienced beneficiaries, minors and incompetents may be regarded as the chief function of this service. It is growing enormously throughout the land, due entirely to the satisfactory results obtained by reason of conscientious and skillful administration and attention to detail.

Now, except for the sad transition of death, the lives of the surviving relatives may go on uninterrupted, the hearth fire may continue to cast its warm spell and the loved ones that remain may continue to plan and hope, safe in the knowledge that a humane and competent trustee is carrying on for them.

The cost of this necessary service is comparatively nominal. Highly efficient management of an estate, great or small, invariably conserves the property that the decedent hands down to his heirs whereas wasteful, unskilled and inexperienced management is frequently found when inexperienced executors are burdened with difficult and complicated estates. The Trust Department is indeed the physician of family and business finances. Its duties are to safeguard the assets of the estate for the benefit of the beneficiaries. Those duties take decided precedence over the question of what it shall receive for its services.

The bank may act as depositary or custodian of the personal property held by executors, administrators, trustees or guardians so that they will be relieved of the responsibility of the safety of such property. In addition all qualified persons may confer with the bank as to the investment belonging to the estate.

The bank through its Trust Department may not only administer the estates of decedents who reside in California, but may also handle all matters relating to property owned in California by a decedent who was a resident of another state. Under these circumstances it may act as agent for other trust companies and other executors.

Under life insurance trusts, which are growing increasingly prominent, the bank may safeguard the policies of life insurance so that the wishes of the insured may be fully protected.

Trust service as practiced by most trust companies in California concerns itself not only with court trusts, in which the bank acts as administrator or executor, but also with living trusts and corporate trusts. Court trusts and living trusts concern very vitally the personal interests of individuals. All of the functions heretofore referred to in this article, in addition to guardianships of the estates of minors and incompetents, concern individuals solely.

Service to corporations, known as corporate trusts, include the function of acting as registrar of corporate stocks and as transfer agent. The registrar guards the public against stock over-issues and other possible abuses of the stock distribution privilege. The transfer agent directs the operation of transferring the stock from the corporation to the stockholder, first seeing that all of the legal requirements of the stock issue have been complied with.

The bank may also act as reveiver or assignee in bankruptcy cases and as fiscal agent for the handling of funds belonging to corporations.

Because of the ever increasing complexity of modern business and the necessity of careful guidance in financial matters, trust departments of banks are appealing strongly to those who wish to avail themselves of this highly developed, highly efficient yet reasonable service.

SALARY INEQUALITIES OF TRAFFIC OFFICERS

Inequalities in salaries paid traffic officers by the various counties of California running as high as $275 a month were revealed in a report made public by the State Department of Finance.

The report, based on a survey of salaries by fiscal experts of the department, declares "a startling lack of uniformity exists in the pay of the officers, some counties paying as high as $500 per month for traffic captains, and others paying only $225 and $250 for the same work."

Although the state has recognized this condition for some time, it is powerless to equalize salaries of officers, according to Alexander R. Heron, director of finance, inasmuch as the salaries are fixed by the various counties in which the officers are employed.

Heron said the situation could be remedied only by some sort of arrangement such as is proposed in the Breed Bill creating a state-controlled highway patrol.

The survey of the experts developed that two counties, Humboldt and Kern, pay their traffic captains $500 and $450 a month while other counties, such as Placer, San Benito and San Luis Obispo, pay traffic captains as low as $225 a month and other officers at proportionate rates.

"There si apparently little reason for these inequalities inasmuch as the character of the work of the officers is the same in many of the counties where such inequalities exists," says the report.

THE STORY

Events of the story as set forth in the journal of William A. Porter, professor of English literature:

The professor's uncle, Horace Porter, died mysteriously at his home, Twin Hollows, now the professor's property. Jane, the professor's wife, is a psychic. With their niece, Edith, the Porters go to Twin Hollows for their vacation, despite Jane's reluctance. A letter Horace had been writing at the time of his death shows that he was interested in spiritualism. It hints of danger. A "red lamp" is mentioned. They take up their residence in the lodge, because of Jane's aversion to the house. Warren Halliday, in love with Edith, comes to live in the boathouse. A number of sheep are mysteriously killed in the vicinity. The slayer leaves a cabalistic sign at the scene of the killings. Greenough, a detective, arrives and Porter has a feeling that he is under suspicion. Twin Hollows is rented to an elderly, partially paralyzed man, Bethel, who, with his secretary, Gordon, takes possession. A youth, Carroway, on watch for the sheep killer, disappears. Porter has the red lamp hidden in a room of which he alone has the key, but many people, including the professor himself, believe they have seen its reflection at Twin Hollows. Halliday is mysteriously attacked and seriously injured. Carroway is found in the bay, murdered. Mary Morrison, Porter's cook, disappears. Gordon, Bethel's secretary, is found unconscious from a blow on the head. Halliday starts an investigation of the mystery. It is discovered that Gordon frequently leaves Twin Hollows at night, clandestinely.

"I don't believe it could be done," he said, with his sideways glance at me. "He's got good ears, the doctor."

He said something before he left about looking for another job, as this one was too confining, and the old man not easy to live with. "I only took it for the summer," he said, "and I'm about fed up with it. It's too confining. And he'd let that car of his rot before he'd let me take it out."

With which clumsy attempt to alibi himself regarding the car, he took his departure. Edith believes that in some manner he knows that the car has been examined, and she may be right. . . .

Halliday's investigation of his room during his absence proceeded without difficulty. With my keys and Annie Cochran's connivance he made an easy entry, Mr. Bethel having retired for his after-luncheon siesta.

At first glance the room offered nothing, and leaving Annie Cochran on guard outside under pretense of cleaning the passage, Halliday made a more intensive search. The bed disclosed nothing, nor did the closet; his suitcase was locked, and over it Halliday spent more time than was entirely safe.

"Toward the end," he says, "I was pretty shaky. I kept thinking I heard him, and of course the more I hurried the more I bungled the thing."

He got it open at last without breaking the lock, and found in it the note-book.

(Note: I find I have given no description of the note-book in the original Journal. As it played a considerable part in the approaching tragedy, it deserves some attention.

It was a small compact volume of the loose-leaf type, a sort of diary, but not regularly kept. Most of the entries, due to the complication of the cipher, were very brief. One or two, however, occupied almost a page, and all of them had been typed.

Needless to say, the cipher was the one we had found on the scrap of paper picked up in my garage.)

The discovery of the note-book with its cipher sent his excitement to fever pitch. He ran through it for the code word, but was unable to find it. Then, replacing the book and leaving the suitcase as he had found it, he set to work more carefully on the room itself.

The coil of rope and the knife were behind a row of books on the bookshelf, a packet of typing paper and a box of carbon sheets thrown over them with apparent casualness, to conceal them still further.

So closely had he calculated the time that he had barely restored them to their places when Gordon slammed the entrance door downstairs.

Halliday had not time to make the back staircase, however. Annie Cochran opened the linen-closet door, and he bolted in there. He heard Gordon unlock his room and enter it, and almost immediately reappear and demand of Annie Cochran if she had been in it during his absence. An angry dispute followed, within a foot or two of the linen-closet, not the less acrimonious because of its lowered voices, and of an almost hysterical quality in Gordon's.

Every particle of his veneer had dropped from him, and the threats he made if he should find she had been in his room are not even to be recorded here. . . .

And now, once again, where are we? We have, as against Gordon:

(a) The knife and the coil of rope.

(b) Our belief that he uses the car, clandestinely, at night.

(c) At least an indication that he set the fire under the boathouse.

(d) The cipher, found in my garage.

(e) the note-book, in the same cipher. A man does not record his thoughts in this manner, unless he wishes to keep them hidden.

(f) The linen strips muffling the oar-locks, and suggested to Halliday today by his place of concealment. The inventory of the main house shows a certain number of linen sheets. If one is missing it will prove a strong factor in connecting him with the boat.

(g) The locking of his bedroom.

(h) Last and not least, an unpleasant personality. Halliday uses the word "degenerate," but I am not prepared to go so far.

As against all this, however, we have:

(a) The attack on him at the kitchen door, and the manner in which he was tied, corresponding to the rope about Carroway.

(b) The sheep-killing and murder of Carroway, taking place as they did before his arrival.

(c) The fact that Halliday cannot identify him as the man he picked up in his car.

(d) The distinguishing mark by which the criminal has signed his crimes, so to speak, is the circle and triangle, drawn in chalk; while this is not vital, Halliday found no chalk in the room. . . .

I have put to Halliday the boy's veiled inquiry about the doctor. It is impossible for us to experiment with the bell, but he thinks it could be distinctly heard from the main road.

On the other hand, the arrival of Hayward on the scene almost as soon as I had got there is extremely puzzling. We have tonight paced off the distance, in view of my statement that I had lighted only one match when the doctor's flashlight was turned on me.

There seems to be no doubt that Hayward was on the property last night. But I do not accept the possibility, suggested by Halliday, that as he was in Greenough's confidence he had been watching me. A man does not, I imagine, go out on such an errand with his medical bag in his hand, and the doctor had carried his bag. I recall distinctly his taking from it the dressings for Gordon's head.

August 9.

Nothing new today. Halliday watched the main house last night, but no one left it. Annie Cochran reports that Mr. Bethel is suspicious of Gordon, and that the feud between them still continues. He declines the secretary's assistance as much as possible.

That he is not certain, however, is shown by the care with which he now has the house locked up at night.

"He waits in the library," she says, "until I've locked all the doors and windows. Then I bring him the keys, except the one to the kitchen door. He lets me have that to get in with in the morning."

He is showing considerable courage, to my mind. . . .

Mrs. Livingstone told us a new story, illustrative of the general state of the local mind. She says that three nights ago Hadly, who keeps the hardware store in Oakville, when passing the cemetery where Carroway is buried, saw a figure walking slowly past the grave. It stopped, looked at the mound and then moved on, fading into nothing at the clump of evergreens beyond it.

Hadly seems to have made no further investigation!

August 10.

At midnight last night Halliday wakened me by throwing pebbles against the screen of my window. He was standing close underneath, and asked me to put on something and work my way quietly toward the other house.

"What's wrong?" I asked.

"He's getting ready to go out, I think. He put his light out at eleven, and turned it on again a few minutes ago."

Halliday moved away, and as quickly as possible I dressed and followed him. He was under the trees, waiting, when I joined him, and together we worked quietly across the garden and toward the garage, coming out beyond it, toward the lane. Here, while concealed ourselves, we had a full view of the house, but the light was out again and for a time it looked as though nothing more were to happen.

We stood together, well hidden in the shrubbery, for some time. Halliday, who has not had much sleep for a night or two, fell to yawning, and I was not much better off, when I heard some sort of stealthy movement in the woodland to our left. I touched Halliday on the arm, to find him rigid and bending forward, staring toward the house.

"He's coming," he said. "Quiet!" The boy was raising his window screen, with all possible caution. Even when it was accomplished he stood so long, probably listening and watching, that I began to think he had changed his mind and gone back to bed, but as events showed, he had done nothing of the sort.

Up to this moment I had not suspected the use of the rope, although I believe Halliday had. The darkness was extreme. But now I heard a faint scraping against the wall of the house itself and realized that Gordon was coming down by means of the rope.

His coming was as stealthy as the preliminaries had been. He was probably half-way down, coming hand over hand, before I had interpreted the sound.

I was not even aware that he had reached the ground, when I saw him, a blacker shadow among other shadows, near at hand. But he did not come directly toward the garage; he walked along under the walls of the west wing to the gun-room window and stood there. Then, with extreme caution, he raised it an inch or two, as if to reassure himself that it had been unlocked from within, and closed it again.

From there, with somewhat less caution, he moved to the corner of the house and seemed to be surveying the waterfront and the boathouse. We had our only real view of him then, as he stood silhouetted on the top of the rise. But suddenly something alarmed him. Neither Halliday nor I saw or heard anything, but evidently he did, and realized, too, his exposed position.

He dropped to the ground. So unexpected was his sudden disappearance, that I gasped; it was not until I heard him creeping along the ground that I understood his maneuver. He lost no time in his retreat, nor did he attempt to use the rope again. He raised the unlocked window, crept over the sill, and closed it again, all with surprising rapidity and silence, and sooner than we could have expected we heard him drawing up the rope from his room overhead. . . .

No interpretation of this is possible without taking into consideration the really horrible stealth of the boy's manner. He was engaged on some nefarious business of his own, whether we can connect that with the crimes or not.

As to the extremely dramatic manner in which he chose to escape from the house, when he had already unlocked the gun-room window, Halliday is divided between two theories, of which he himself favors the second.

"He may be merely dramatizing himself; you'll find a certain type of degenerate mind which is always acting for its own benefit. Or—and this is more likely—our old friend Bethel is suspicious and is watching him. The old man's door commands his. He locks his door from the inside, uses his rope, and is free to go where he pleases.

"But," he added, after a pause, "he unlocks the gun-room window, too, so he can beat a retreat if he has to. That's the best I can do, and if it isn't correct it ought to be!"

Today I am convinced beyond doubt that Gordon is our criminal, and I think even Halliday is shaken. I am no detective, but it seems to me that the boy coming here during the height of the excitement about the sheep-killer and young Carroway, found the way already paved for a career of secret crime, and adopting the methods and the symbol of some still undiscovered religious maniac, has carried on, one may say, under his banner.

Certainly one fact at least supports the idea. Halliday may be right, and the attack on him not have been made by Gordon. But there seems no reason to doubt that, some time on the day before we got back, he crept into my garage and put the infernal symbol where we found it.

We have discussed today at some length the desirability of notifying the police once more. But our recent experience with them is not reassuring. On the other hand, I feel strongly that Mr. Bethel should be warned. But Halliday argues against it.

"He knows something already," he says. "He is on guard, and the boy knows it. Then you have to remember that the game, so far, has been to strike in the dark, and run. That is, if you are correct, Skipper, and it is a game, without motive."

Probably he is right. There would be little chance for him if he attacked the old man; he is too well known to be on bad terms with him. Such a warning, also, might alarm Mr. Bethel to the point of getting rid of him, and after all the only chance we have is to let him go a certain length, and then, with our proofs, call in the police.

But I am very uneasy tonight as I make this entry. I have not Halliday's easy optimism that he "won't get away with anything without our knowing it."

August 11.

I had a visit last night from "Cuckoo" Hadly, our village Don Juan, who sells hardware over his counter to pretty village matrons, and who was dubbed "Cuckoo" some years ago by a summer visitor who saw a resemblance to Byron in him.

Hadly was slightly sheepish. He knows, and he knows I know, that his road home at night lies nowhere near the cemetery. At the same time, he had something to tell me, and was determined to go through with it.

It appears, then, that it was not near Carroway's grave that Hadly saw the figure, but in the old part of the cemetery, and that there are some facts which he has not given out.

The cemetery is surrounded by a white fence, and inside it is shrubbery. Hadly, it seems, was not alone, but was standing in the road, "talking to a friend." If, as I imagine, the friend was a woman, it was surely a safe place for a rendezvous!

It was the "friend" who saw the light, and who accounts for the suppression of this portion of the tale. It shone through the shrubbery, a small blue-white light about two feet from the ground, and directly in front of the headstone of one George Pierce, who died in the last seventeen hundreds.

Hadly did not see the light, but the "friend" persisting, he crept through the shrubbery to take a look around. It was then that he saw the figure, moving slowly and deliberately toward the trees.

He seems to have no doubt that he saw an apparition, or that the information belongs to me, the reason he gives for the latter being that George Pierce is the gentleman who was, according to local tradition, shot and killed while attempting to escape the excise in the old farmhouse which is now a part of Twin Hollows.

I have entered this here, because the day seems given over to the supernatural. We have breakfasted with the spirit world, and seem about to lunch with it.

Everything continues quiet at the other house. . . .

Jane and I today returned the Livingstones' call. Although it seems absurd, I have never quite abandoned the hope of finding, in Uncle Horace's unfinished letter, a clew to the present mystery.

I therefore took it with me, hoping for an opportunity to show it to Mrs. Livingstone. But none came. Doctor

It Was Then That He Saw the Figure.

Hayward was there when we arrived and remained after we left. Perhaps, because my own world is awry, I think the universe is so.

But it seemed to me that we were shown in to what almost amounted to a situation; that Livingstone, usually dapper and calm, was flushed, and that Mrs. Livingstone was on the verge of tears. The doctor, standing by the window, hardly acknowledged our entrance, and remained standing, glowering and biting his fingers, until we left.

He is, I understand, soon to leave for a holiday.

August 13.

August 14.

Tomorrow Hayward says I shall be able to see Greenough; the first intimation I have had that he is back in the neighborhood.

But I feel that my consciousness of my own innocence will be nothing against Greenough's sheer determination to prove me guilty. And yet, guilty of what? Of a bullet buried in the floor of my own house, and a broken window! We have had no further crime. Nothing is altered, save my own feeling that a net is closing around me, and that some malignant fate is sitting spider fashion in the center of it, waiting to pounce on me and destroy me.

Suppose, like a lawyer preparing a brief, I make my statement here, and tomorrow read to him? At last I can make this entry full and explicit. It passes the time, and he may be willing to listen. . . .

This is the 14th. It was, then, the early evening of the 11th, when Annie Cochran stopped at the Lodge on her way home and asked to see me at the kitchen door.

"I'm leaving, Mr. Porter," she said. "I don't like to make trouble for you, but I can't stand that secretary."

"What has he done, Annie?"

"Done!" she said, and sniffed. "He's watching me, for one thing. I never go upstairs but he's at my heels. But that's not all. He's going to make trouble for Mr. Bethel. You mark my words. And Mr. Bethel knows it; he's scared tonight."

There had been a quarrel, she said, at dinner, carefully camouflaged while she was in the room, but breaking out again the moment she left it. So far as she could make out, it had to do with the secretary's leaving the house at night, and his insistence that he go out when and how he liked. But there was something beneath that, she thought. "There was murder in that boy's face, Mr. Porter."

Mr. Bethel, she thought, was trying to quiet him, but he refused to be quieted. Finally Gordon got up and flung open the pantry door, finding her inside it, and he said, according to her: "Listening, are you? Well, you'd better watch out, or you'll get something you don't expect." Then he went into the hall, got his hat and slammed out of the house, leaving the paralytic sunk in his chair.

"He's gone? Where?"

"He didn't say. He just took the car and went."

She was uneasy; she had construed what he said as a threat against her of a serious sort, and I drove her into Oakville myself. On the way I tried to persuade her to return to her employment for a time at least, on the ground that we might need her, and she finally agreed.

Destination of Soul Shown by Odd Signs

The Gaures, an ancient African tribe, entombed the bodies of dead friends in tall towers instead of burying them in the earth. During the first three days after the body had been laid in the tower it was thought to be in danger of being carried away by the devil, and kinsmen kept watch to prevent him from tormenting the soul as it winged its way to the celestial regions.

On or before the fourth day the soul was in a place of torment or happiness, and the priests proceeded to prognosticate the future state of the deceased. The body was laid on its back, with the eyes turned toward heaven, and the vultures were permitted to feast upon it. The soul was supposed to have gone to bliss if the right eye was taken first, but it was an equally sure omen that the soul had gone to a place of punishment if the left eye was first devoured.

Another mode of ascertaining the state of happiness or misery of a soul was by the movements of a dog near the corpse. If the animal went close to it, then were the relatives convinced the soul was in a state of bliss, but if the dog could not be tempted to go near the body they despaired of their friend escaping everlasting torment.—Detroit News.

Good Bargain

"Isn't that a new coat, Mandy?" asked the clerk in a small town store of a seemingly happy customer, a large, good-natured colored woman who recently had been married for the third time.

"Yes, sir, this is a new coat. This is a present to me from my new man," admitted Mandy.

"And what did you give him?" asked the curious one.

"Me? What did I give him?" I give him nothin' 'cept just me. I just give him me."

Plea for Tolerance

What is abhorrent to you may be not only justifiable conduct to another, but actually praiseworthy. That is where the spirits of tolerance and charity come in. We can't all think alike, any more than all trees can bear similar foliage and fruit. We are all inconsistent. Not one of us acts according to the standard his best self sets.

Besides, we are all more or less like the man in the fable, who carried two wallets over his shoulder, one in front and one behind. The one behind contained his own faults, the one in front his neighbor's. Can it be wondered that he was always conscious of his neighbor's faults and forgetful of his own?—London Tit-Bits.

University's History

Columbia university was founded in 1754 as King's college by royal grant of George II, king of England, "for the instruction of youth in the learned languages and the liberal arts and sciences." The Revolutionary war interrupted its active work, but in 1784 it was reopened as Columbia college. In 1912 the title was changed to Columbia university.

GEORGE WASHINGTON

In a month replete with notable birthdays, February 22 stands out in the minds of Americans as the date of greatest significance, the birthday of George Washington.

As a national holiday it is perhaps second only to the Fourth of July, while as a matter of fact it is probably an anniversary of even higher importance, because without a Washington the struggling colonies might not have made the Declaration of Independence effective.

Although much that is legendary has been associated with the life of Washington, due principally, it is claimed, to the zeal of Parson Weems, his early biographer, the main facts of his inestimable service stands unimpeached, and his fame takes on added luster with the years.

Leading a poorly trained, ill-equipped and sometimes mutinous army, Washington kept aflame the fires of patriotism when a less determined and less capable commander might have given up in despair. While aid from France finally turned the scale in favor of the colonies, without Washington's genius and heroic persistence the Continental Army would have been crushed into submission before that aid arrived.

It is well that we should honor his memory on his birthday, and on all other days, but nothing we may say or do can add to or substract from the priceless heritage epitomized in the deathless name of Washington.

THE KING IMPROVES

The whole civilized world has followed with genuine sympathy and solicitude the reports from the bedside of King George V, who as this is written appears to have won his brave fight for life against tremendous odds.

Since his accession to the throne in 1910, King George has maintained the affection of his far-flung empire, and has won universal respect. In his early years he was known as "the sailor prince," having joined the British Navy at the age of 12, rising to the rank of captain in the regular order of promotion. While upholding the royal traditions, he has been a democratic and sympathetic ruler, with true zeal for the welfare of his people.

Everyone will rejoice that he now appears to be on the high road to recovery.

LINCOLN AND DARWIN

On February 12, 1809, two boy babies were born in widely separated homes, one in America and the other in England, but both were destined to exert a far-reaching influence upon their own and future generations. They were Abraham Lincoln and Charles Robert Darwin.

Aside from their common birthday and the fact that both attained undying fame, their careers were almost entirely dissimilar. Lincoln lived in the maelstrom of politics and war, while Darwin pursued the quiet life of a naturalist, although the scientific ideas which he advanced raised a mighty controversy, the end of which is not yet in sight.

Lincoln was born of rather obscure parents, had almost no formal education, but rose to the presidency of the United States during the time of the nation's greatest crisis. His assassination just at the close of the Civil war deprived the country of his wise guidance during reconstruction. Had he lived, much of the bitterness engendered during that trying period might have been avoided. But his greatness of mind and heart is universally recognized and his name honored in the South as well as in the North.

Darwin came of distinguished ancestry, was educated at Oxford, and as a result of his researches gave to the world the epoch-making work, "The Origin of Species," in which, to quote Rev. Henry Van Dyke, "he gave lucidity and coherence to the conception of a progressive and continuous creation, which has changed the face of the modern scientific world."

Probably no two persons born on the same day ever made such an impress upon the lives and thoughts of their fellow-men as have Lincoln and Darwin, who first saw the light 120 years ago.

BOYS WHO MAKE GOOD

It is always pleasing to observe a home-town boy who makes good in the city, and there are many leaders in the business and professional life of the great metropolitan centers who began life in the small towns and on the farms of the country.

But it is even more gratifying to observe one who rises to national leadership, yet remains in the environment of a small community. This thought is brought to mind by a recent news item concerning the presentation of a silver set to John E. Edgerton of Lebanon, Tenn., a town of about 6,000 inhabitants, by the manufacturers' association of his state, to the presidency of which he has just been elected for the fifteenth consecutive year.

This in itself is a high distinction, but when it is known that Mr. Edgerton has also been president of the National Association of Manufacturers since 1921, during which time he has been the recognized spokesman for the combined manufacturing industries of the United States, the opportunity for leadership by the "small-town man" is most strikingly emphasized.

It illustrates that boys—and girls, too—who possess ability, energy and character can make good anywhere. And to all such the achievements of Mr. Edgerton should be a continuing source of inspiration.

AUTO POWER BY RADIO

Another prediction which may sound fantistic was made the other day, to the effect that we shall in a few years have automobiles that will run without fuel, the motive power being supplied from a central station by radio. The idea is advanced by not a crank or visionary, but a no less authority than G. M. Williams, president of the Marmion company, who declares that such a plan is receiving serious consideration by leading automotive engineers.

According to this plan, each car would have a certain receiving wave-length, and by throwing the switch a generator of corresponding wave-length in the central station would supply the power. Many cars might have the same wave-length, so long as the total load could be carried by the corresponding generator.

We do not vouch for the practicability of this suggestion, but only pass it on as an indication of what may happen. In any event it illustrates the daring conceptions of the modern engineer. And who can say that the idea may not some day be made to work?

SENATE SECRECY

According to the views of some of its members, the dignity of the Senate was outraged a few days ago when a supposed secret vote on the confirmation of Secretary of the Interior West was disclosed by a newspaper reporter —who refused to tell how he secured his information.

In any event the incident placed the Senate in a rather ridiculous light. One or two members declared that the list of votes as published was inaccurate, but dared not tell in what respect it was incorrect, because all were pledged to secrecy.

There may be reasons for executive sessions on those rare occasions when grave matters of public policy are desired to be withheld from other nations. But in so simple a matter as that of approving or rejecting a nomination of the president, it would seem that secrecy is entirely unwarranted.

Oscar DePriest, of Chicago, may feel a bit lonesome in the Seventy-first Congress, but he will at least have the satisfaction of constituting the entire negro bloc.

We read that a telephone company held a "repeater school" in Louisville. For voters?

The country is anxiously waiting to see what an engineer can do when he turns cabinet-maker.

Daisy Scott, a Kentucky bred mare, learned to stop at a red signal and go ahead on a green one, whereby she lived thirty-seven years. A lot of humans never develop that much horse sense.

Metropolitan newspapers suggest this and that with respect to running the town, yet poke fun at a country editor who insists that the mudhole in front of the post-office needs attention.

SIDELIGHTS

An aged night janitor journeyed from Quincy, Mass., to Philadelphia a few nights ago, attended a big banquet and was paid much attention at the Penn Athletic Club. Then he went back to his humble job. He was Jake Kilrain, who 42 years ago took a beating at the hands of John L. Sullivan in one of the fiercest ring battles in history—seventy-five rounds with bare knuckles.

Although Mr. and Mrs W. O. Irwin of Missouri have their troubles, they have managed to keep their family fairly close together. With three sons they are serving a five-year term in the penitentiary, after the whole family pleaded guilty to stealing about 1,200 chickens.

The city of Mantua, Italy, planned to crown a statue of the Blessed Virgin with a golden, jeweled crown in the year 1640. Civil strife and one thing and another caused postponements until the plan was renewed early in the 19th century. Then Napolean came along and carried off the crown and jewels among other things. But Mantua didn't forget—the Virgin was crowned a few days ago, 289 years after the date originally set.

Just how Deputy Sheriff W. A. Fowler of Addington, Okla., learned to drive with one hand doesn't matter. Anyway, that accomplishment came in handy recently. Pursuing two bank robbers in an automobile, driving with one hand and shooting with the other, he killed one bandit, wounded the second and recovered the entire loot amounting to $3,700.

Harry Forsyth of Pittsburgh thinks he is boss around home, but his wife demurred when he took three of her chickens and a ham and traded them for whiskey. She had him arrested for theft, but the judge sided with Harry and turned him loose.

The story is told of a young woman who was inspecting an electrical washing machine with a view to purchasing it. Pointing at a hole in the bottom she asked what it was for, the salesman told her it was to let the water out, whereupon she exclaimed: "Oh, it doesn't wash by electricity, does it? You have to use water!"

Girl at the Top in Health Test

Millions of boys and girls all over the world, thousands of them right here in the West are being restored to health and strength by the purely vegetable tonic and laxative known as California Fig Syrup and endorsed by physicians for over 50 years.

Children need no urging to take it. They love its rich, fruity flavor. Nothing can compete with it as a gentle, but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It gives tone and strength to the stomach and bowels so these organs continue to act normally, of their own accord. It stimulates the appetite, helps digestion.

A Kansas mother, Mrs. Dana Allgire, 610 Monroe St., Topeka, says: "Bonnie B. is absolutely the picture of health, now, with her ruddy cheeks, bright eyes and plump but graceful little body and she stands at the top in every health test.

Much of the credit for her perfect condition is due to California Fig Syrup. We have used it since babyhood to keep her bowels active during colds or any children's ailments and she has always had an easy time with them. She always responds to its gentle urging and is quickly back to normal."

Ask your druggist for California Fig Syrup and look for the word "California" on the carton so you'll always get the genuine.

"Rain" of Quails

When quails began to fall into the streets of Nimes, the historic town in France, the residents immediately thought of Santa Claus. Some of the birds fell just in front of the principal cafes in the main street, and there was a rush of customers to secure them. The "bag" was reported to be much larger than that obtained by local sportsmen on a day's hunting trip. The birds evidently had fallen from exhaustion after a long flight.

TRANS-AMERICA WILL PAY BIG DIVIDEND THIS QUARTER

Trans-America Corporation will pay a quarterly dividend of more than $20,000,000, represented by the regular cash dividend of $4 per share per annum, for the period ending April 25, and a special dividend in stock for this quarter of one per cent—equivalent to a quarterly return of $2.30 per share at the present market—and will offer to stockholders of the Bank of America, New York, the exchange privilege of one and one-half shares of Trans-America Corporation for each share of Bank of America. Announcement of this action was made by L. M. Giannini, exectutive vice-president of the Corporation, following a recent meeting of the board of directors.

"Our stockholders will have every reason to feel well pleased with the action of the board," said Giannini, "since the result materially increases the return. The declaration of this special stock dividend for this quarter is in line with the liberal policy consistenly followed of giving something extra to our stockholders as the earnings justify such a procedure, and when considerable appreciation in the market price of the stock has not been enjoyed. While this should not be understood as necessarily fixing our future policy, at the same time, if later in the year our board of directors should decided that we were warranted in making periodic, special distributions of some sort, there appears to be no reason why a plan might not be adopted calling for quarterly or semi-annual special dividends payable in stock. Early in 1928 we announced that we did not intend to make any additional distribution during the year, believing that an extra dividend at that time would have further encouraged speculation.

"Our desire is to have the stockholders of Trans-America Corporation purchase the stock on a permanent investment basis, counting on a regular dividend comparable to that of a savings bank account, and with a consistent but conservative appreciation in the value of their holdings, through earnings in excess of dividend requirements."

Distribution of permanent Trans-America Corporation certificates, it is expected, will be made about March 15. Election of George A. Webster, vice-president and a director of the Bank of Italy, and George E. Hoyer, vice-president of the Bank of America, New York, to vice-presidencies in Trans-America Corporation, was announced following the meeting. Other officers elected were: A. P. Giannini, president; L. M. Giannini and W. H. Snyder, executive vice-presidents; P. C. Hale, James A. Bacigalupi, A. Pedrini, Dr. A. H. Giannini, L. V. Belden, J. F. Cavagnaro, John M. Grant, Carl Stamer, H. P. Preston, and A. A. Wilson, vice-presidents; Thomas L. Walker, secretary and treasurer.

VETERAN TRYING TO PROVE HE IS ALIVE

Appeal has been taken to the American Legion by Thomas R. Smith of Santa Rosa to prove that although he was listed during the World War as "killed in action," the report of his death, like that of Mark Twain, was "greatly exaggerated."

The United States goverment for ten years has been insisting that Smith's sister, Mrs. Nellie Johnson of Santa Rosa, accept $10,000 in war risk insurance for her brother's "death." Mrs. Johnson and her brother have steadfastly declined to admit the "death" and now Smith has asked Petaluma Post of the American Legion to aid in straightening out the records at Washington. Smith went overseas with Company B, 342nd machine gun battalion, was wounded in action; hospitalized and in due time was returned home and discharged. The goverment continues to insist that he is buried overseas, but Smith declines to "play dead."

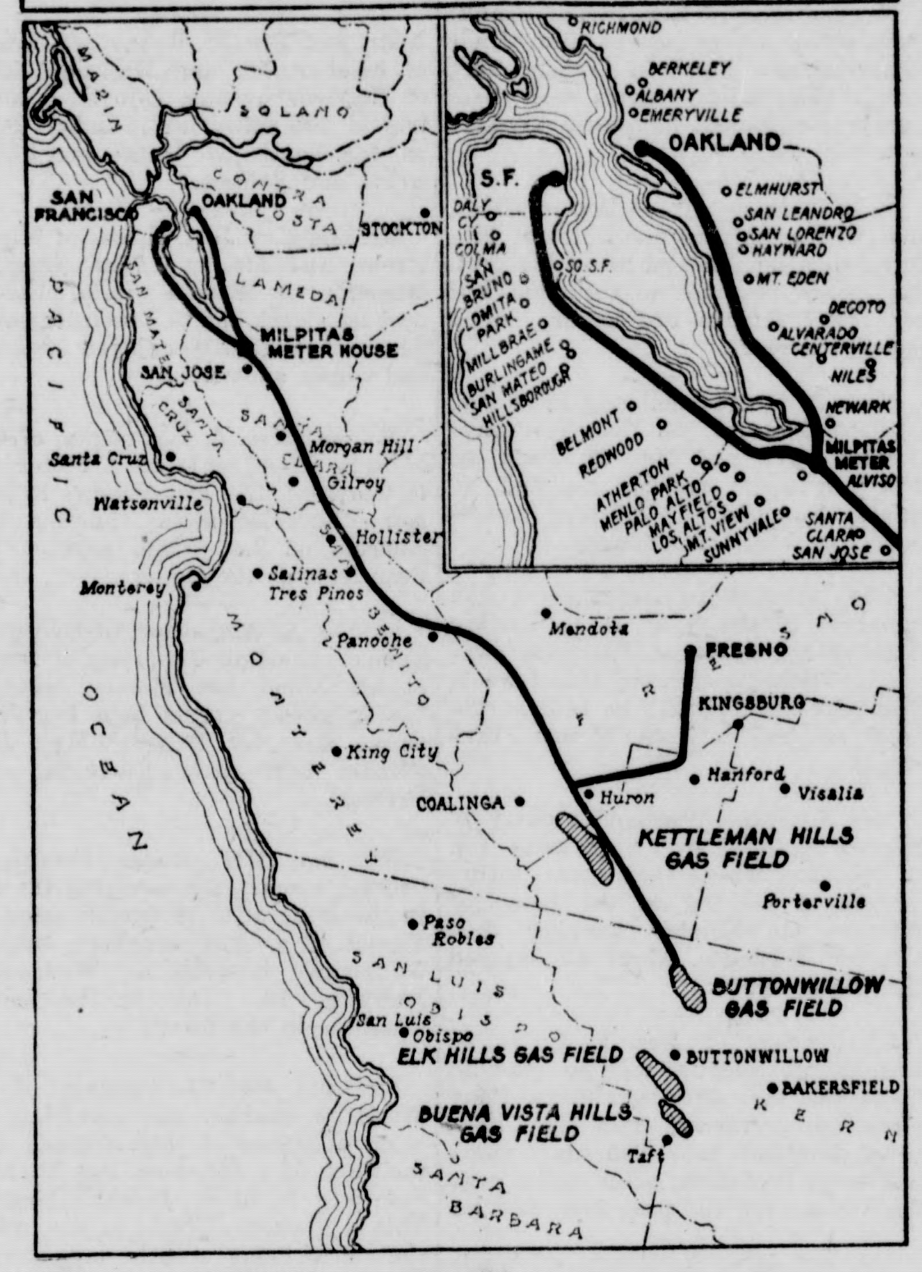
Bringing In Natural Gas To Stimulate Development



Three Million Dollars Annual Saving To Consumers

The above illustration is descriptive of the main transmission line through which the Pacific Gas and Electric Company is bringing Natural Gas to the Bay Area. The mains will be of 20 inch pipe, 282 miles in length with a capacity of 125,000,000 cubic feet per day. The work involves an expenditure of over $13,000,000.00.

TELEPHONE AIDS IN RESCUE OF ENTOMBED MINE WORKERS

When more than 200 men were entombed this year in a mine at Mather, Pa., the mine's telephone system helped greatly in the work of rescue, and to those who had temporarily escaped the deadly gas, this telephone line carried a note of hopefulness and cheer which meant a great deal to the men who were beckoning for their lives. Ultimately sixty-three lives were saved in this disaster, and if it had not been for the mine telephone system, the workers above might not have been able to reach even these in time.

DALY CITY THEATRE OFFERS THE LATEST OF FILM FEATURES

For Friday, playing continuous from 1:45 to 11, Jack Holt and Nancy Carroll will be the attraction at the Daly City Theatre, where they will appear in Zane Grey's massive Paramount special, "The Water Hole," a supreme dramatic achievement filmed in the natural colors of old Arizona, with a superlative case of featured players. Other attractions on this bill will include a screamingly funny Smitty comedy called "All Aboard," with a Crazy Kat Cartoon and the Paramount News. A special stage attraction during the night show, Dumbell and his merry gang of funsters, will appear with the Country Store capers.

"CHINATOWN CHARLIE"

For Saturday, playing matinee and night, the Daly City will offer funny Johnny Hines in "Chinatown Charlie," a delightful fun picture with San Francisco as the locale. On the same bill there will be a Big Boy comedy, a Fable and the News. Episode No. 4 of the serial "The Vanishing West" will be shown at the matinee only for the kiddies.

"NELSON'S SUNSHINE GIRLS"

It's all for whoopee Sunday, when Freddie Nelson and his popular company of musical comedy stars will appear with "The Sunshine Girls" in another big song and dance revue, together with "Lingeree," a Tiffany gem, with a great cast of stars, including Alice White, Malcolm McGregor, Mildred Harris and a host of others. It is a peppy, spicy story of Paris, full of romance and fun. On the same bill will be found Bill Dooley in "A She Going Sailor," and the usual short subjects.

"THIEF IN THE DARK"

For Monday the Daly City Theatre has booked an attraction of exceptional merit in "Thief in the Dark," a mystery thriller said to excell in thrills and spooky situations, with a great cast of players, including Gwen Lee, George Meeker, Doris Hill and many others. Charley Chase will be there for the fun part of the bill in "Never the Dames Shall Meet."

For Tuesday the Daly City will present Universal's massive special of Broadway night life called "Phyllis of the Follies," with Matt Moore and Alice Day in the leading roles and with Lilyan Tashman and Edward Burns in the supporting roles. On the same bill will be found the usual short subjects.

"THE RACKET"

Marie Prevost, Louis Wolheim, Thomas Meighan, Skeets Gallagher and Lee Moran means a great picture for anybody when cast together, but in Paramount's "The Racket," the super story of big city bootleg gangs, police, newspaper men, night clubs and politics, it means one of the biggest thrill picture plays with the finest balanced cast ever projected. Take our word for it, it's great, and you will have one of the best evening's entertainment you have experienced in many a moon. On the same bill Lupino Lane will be seen in "Hello, Sailor," a screamingly funny comedy special.

On Thursday, Helene Costello will appear in "In Old Kentucky," a thrilling race track story, full of action and romance. Our Gang will also be seen in "Crazy House."

JIMMY LYNCH TO RETURN

Jimmy Lynch, popular organist, will return to the console of the Robert Morton organ at the Daly City Theatre next Saturday, and will offer a splendid array of new numbers during his return engagement. Jimmy is very popular with Daly City audiences and his return has been looked for with great interest.

BEES CRIPPLE TELEPHONES

Telephone service was partially crippled in the vicinity of Richmond, Michigan, recently, because of the activities of a swarm of bees. The bees constructed a nest in a cable box high up on a fifty-foot pole. The nest was built over the fuses, thereby causing short circuits to a large number of lines. When telephone employees ascertained the source of the difficulty, one of the "trouble shooters" donned heavy gloves and a mosquito netting mask and finally succeeded in removing the cause of the trouble.

DISCUSS COMPENSATION INSURANCE PROBL2EMS

Northern California field representatives of the State Compensation Insurance Fund have concluded the conference held at the Home Office in the State Building, Civic Center, San Francisco. Manager Frank J. Creede announced that the Fund's premiums for 1928 were in excess of $7,000,000.00 and that dividends to policyholders for this period were $1,764,000.00.

Compensation insurance problems and the rate revision to become effective March 1st were discussed and plans formulated for the handling of the greatly increased volume of business now being received.

Liquor was pulled across the Niagra river by pulleys attached to a 120,000-volt power line. Voltage of the liquor was not stated.

EDUCATION OBTAINABLE ON INSTALLMENT PLAN

Education has fallen in line with most of the other luxuries of life and is now largely obtainable on the installment plan, according to a statement issued by the Department of the Interior. Students who desire to finance their college education on that plan have many opportunities to borrow money, go to college, graduate and afterwards repay their loans in a business like manner. Ambitious students are assisted in financing their education by the colleges and universities themselves, and by many independent organizations.

In 282 colleges and universities, funds totaling nearly $4,000,000 are loaned annually to students of character and ability for the purpose of completing their college educations. Although these funds are administered by the several institutions, there is no uniformity as to the manner in which they are handled. Repayment generally begins at a stated period after graduation. As soon as a student needing this educational help decides upon the institution to be attended, he should then find out by correspondence what loan funds and scholarships are available and what self-help oppprtunities may later be open to him.

"THE REDEEMING SIN" COMING TO THE EMBASSY

After a successful three weeks' engagement Fannie Brice in "My Man" will give away to "The Redeeming Sin" next Wednesday at the Embassy Theatre. This is the torrid story of the Parisian underworld which was written by Warner Brothers scenarists especially for Dolores Costello.

Their loveliest star appears in a new role. A characterization which is far removed from the dignified beauties of history which she previously portrayed. In this new role, she is a gamine of the underworld with many of the qualities possessed by Diane in "Seventh Heaven."

Conrad Nagel, who has proved such an admirable foil for the star in the past, is again her leading man. Few actors have been so favored by the Vitaphone as has this graduate of the legitimate stage. His success with Miss Costello in "Tenderloin," and "Glorious Betsy," has earned him the position of being one of the most desired leading men in the film capitol. The Embassy Theatre feels that they have a winner in "The Redeeming Sin."

If we could see ourselves as others see us we wouldn't believe our eyes.

Two is company, but three is a bloc that will try to get a law passed.
